

Prison and Personality Disordered Offenders

2nd Annual Conference

asc

AndrewSimsCentre
for professional development

Thursday 1 December 2011

The Met Hotel, King Street, Leeds, LS1 2HQ

Approximately two-thirds of prisoners have at least one type of personality disorder, providing significant management challenges within the prison environment. The most serious personality disordered offenders can pose very high risks of harm to self and others and have proved to be the subject of much debate over recent years in relation to their longer term management leading to the recent consultation exercise to explore the most effective offender pathway for these individuals.

This conference will provide an update on management strategies for personality disordered offenders in the prison environment. You will also gain a greater understanding of the options for treatment for personality disordered offenders both in the prison, hospital and other settings. With the recent consultation process, this conference will provide up to date information in relation to the future management of a very difficult and challenging group of offenders.
